

WAR FAILS TO STIR RELIGIOUS ENTHUSIASM IN BRITISH CITIES

France and Italy Show Remarkable Religious Activity But England Shows Lethargy; Appeals For Women to Make Bombs For Army Posted in English Churches; Y. M. C. A. May Reduce Its Fees.

ADVISED from Rome, Paris and London, in relation to activity of Christian men and women because of the war, are to the effect that the first two named cities in common with Italy and France, are stirred to such religious work as they never performed before, while in London and throughout England, just Bull refuses to be aroused to the extent Christian leaders think he ought to be. Manchester and Liverpool are reported to be unusually active, but Edinburgh and all of Scotland, London and the east coast, where the Zeppelin raids have taken place, are not at all excited as they might be expected to be. The council of the Free Churches, just held at Bradford, was remarkable for greater unity between Established and Free Churches, but not from any action growing out of war.

In Rome and throughout Italy the Catholic church in cooperating with the government in such ways as it has not done since the days of papal power. This is said to be the case both in relief and in spiritual work. Throughout France Catholic and Protestant churches are working in such ways as surprise oldest Christian people. Soldiers in the trenches are spiritually cared for as they were never before in their lives. The French people are reported again to be loyal to the Catholic church, officials as well as common people, to an extent that will help both immediately. It is claimed, immediately the war ends.

English newspapers, those representing all religious bodies, express regret over the spiritual lethargy, but their advertising pages are filled with benevolent appeals. The Church of England, the Salvation Army, the Young Men's and the Young Women's Christian associations, and the many relief agencies, ten to one more numerous than in America, announce plans almost without numbers for the benefit of not only of soldiers and sailors, but of all sorts of neglected people.

Just now London, Manchester and Birmingham are stirred with the needs of women at work in the munition factories. Best houses have been perfected in plan, and multiplied in numbers. Appeals from church pulpits are everywhere heard to the effect that

Sentence Sermons by El Paso Ministers

THAT there are mysteries in the Bible is true, yet man's duty is in simple, plain language, so much so, that "the wayfaring man, though fool, shall not err therein."—Rev. J. W. Dunn of the Church of Christ.

We will "witness for Christ" to the world just in proportion as we realize his worth in our own soul.—Rev. C. H. Riddle of the East El Paso Baptist church.

If our civilization is ever to be Christian we must give attention to Christianizing the formative forces, of which the home is first and greatest and of which our schools closely follow the home in importance.—Rev. Perry J. Rice of the First Christian church.

By compromising some of our radical and extreme views, mostly the non-essentials, it is possible for Christians to get together, and to do team work as individuals, and as churches, and even as denominations.—Rev. W. C. Baber of the Altura Presbyterian church.

Leave God out of account and the miraculous element is a great stumbling block, but with God as a recognized factor, our efforts to explain are not so strained. God is boundless in power, goodness and wisdom.—Rev. Charles L. Overstreet of the First Presbyterian church.

Dr. Arnold of Rugby would not permit his boys to say "Christ died for us," but instead he taught them to say, "Christ died for me."—Rev. I. N. Langston of the Highland Park Baptist church.

Work out your salvation in fear and trembling, not in a slavish fear of punishment, but in a reasonable distrust of self, knowing your own weakness, lest after all you should go astray.—Rev. Henry Easter of the Church of St. Clement.

Beliefs that really count generally cost something in the getting.—Rev. Miles Hanson of the First Congregational church.

We serve God acceptably when we supplement the singing of hymns and the offering of prayers by rescuing the perishing. Religion that stops short of this is not Christianity.—Rev. C. K. Campbell of Highland Park and Alta Vista Methodist churches.

Those who sneer at Christianity today may have some idea of the regard which future generations will have for them, by considering the regard which the world today has for those who sneered at Christ.—Rev. J. H. Allen of Austin Park Christian church.

Is conscience a true moral guide? If it is a conscience enlightened by the Word of God—otherwise it may lead us into grievous wrong. Paul was conscientious when he was persecuting Christians unto death, but he was doing the work of the devil. As the brick mason continually applies the level to his rising wall to keep it perpendicular, let us continually apply the level of God's inspired word to our consciences to keep them in line with the teachings of that word.—Rev. J. F. Williams of the First Baptist church.

"Trust God and keep your powder dry" is not only good philosophy but it is also good theology.—Rev. Herman G. Porter of the First Methodist Episcopal church.

One of the change want to cut the lines in two in the middle.

CONGREGATIONAL CHURCH SOCIETIES TO BE MERGED

Carrying out plans decided upon at the last national council held at New Haven in October, Congregational Home Church, Church Building and Sunday School societies are to come together at once, with one board of directors. Rev. Dr. C. E. Burton, now general secretary of the first named, will be administrator and executive of all. There will be retained department secretaries for the lines of work, but these will be free from all financial responsibility. In order further to introduce business methods, and put all work of the same kind under one head, the American Missionary association, another denominational society, will transfer to the Home society its educational work among the white mountaineers.

The Home Missionary society named handles about $275,000 a year, the building about $300,000, and the Sunday school has charge of the "Congregationalist," said to be the oldest religious journal in the country. If constituent state societies be included with the Home just from all the financial receipts run up toward $400,000 a year. It is stated that many of these Congregational societies were earlier general agencies, and that not a few Presbyterian churches own their existence to them.

SUNDAY SCHOOLS AROUSE INTEREST IN NEW YORK

The Sunday school interests of this country organized in strongest form in the World's Sunday School association, are focusing attention upon South America. Following the Panama congress a company of Christian education leaders are holding conventions in Lima, Santiago, Buenos Aires, Monte Video and Rio Janeiro. With this company is James H. Cassey, a banker of Denver, long a Sunday school worker there and staunch financial supporter.

London's Haughty Men Shopwalkers Are No More

London, Eng., April 1.—That impertinent person the shopwalker, is disappearing from London. His place, like that of the young man assistant behind the counter, is being taken by a woman and West End dressmakers have been advertising for "lady shopwalkers," tall and of good appearance and address, to take the place of the frockcoated men who have hitherto acted as guides to customers lost in the mazes of millinery.

Lloyd George always gets nervous when he begins to make a speech.

Queen Of Montenegro Gets Cool Reception

Berne, Switzerland, April 1.—A Swiss journalist who was in Lyons when the court of Montenegro arrived in the old French city writes: "It cannot be said that there was any great excitement when the papers announced the arrival of the royal family of Montenegro. Shortly after midnight mayor Herriot, who is also a senator, had received a dispatch from Modane requesting him to reserve rooms for queen Milena, her daughters and their attendants. The message was not signed and the mayor paid no attention to it. When queen Milena and her entourage age reached the city at 6 o'clock in the morning there was nobody at the station to receive them. After much trouble they managed to get two cabs and a small automobile. They drove to the "Hotel Royal," where a door tender, after viewing their scanty baggage, consisting of a few old trunks and pasteboard boxes, refused them admission and informed them rudely that only "first class guests" were desired.

The aged queen, who had traveled day and night for more than a week, was on the verge of a collapse and ordered the drivers to bring her to another hotel. The princess Xenia resolutely insisted that the proprietor be called. He was still sleeping and the queen and her daughters had to wait nearly an hour in the lobby until he appeared. Like the door tender he scorned the travel-stained company and its battered trunks and boxes closely, but he became very polite when he learned the rank of his guests.

As there were no rooms ready, the queen and her daughters had to sit in the lobby until at last they could move into their quarters.

London, Eng., April 1.—More drastic orders to reduce the lighting of London have just been brought into effect, and now all shop and house lights must be screened at their sockets to prevent the escape of any direct light.

But the authorities consider the saving of light over London still too high, and it is expected soon that there will be few, if any, lights showing anywhere, and that all shopping will have to be done by daylight.

The appearance of London just now at night is very strange, and picturesque. The most extraordinary effect is at the West End theaters and hotels, as one passes in from the dark and sinister streets, with the red danger lights everywhere, and buildings with dark and deserted exteriors, into interiors dazzling with lights, and with music and dining and dancing like a festival.

Without Coal, Hamburg Is Almost a Dead City; No Wheels Now Turning

Berlin, Germany, April 1.—"Before the war Hamburg used to import one million marks ($250,000) worth of coal daily from England. During the war we have not imported ten plowing worth." These are the words spoken by one of the directors of the Hamburg American line.

The whole town is running on low gear, all wheels go slower, the bustle and activity which made Hamburg remind you of an American city have given way to stagnation and depression. Automobiles are few and they smell of poor refuse petrol. Pedestrians walk slowly, as if in a funeral cortege.

The stock exchange is a ghost of its former self. In this sumptuous temple, where formerly all the nations of the world danced around the golden calf, shouting and gesticulating, now only a few timid shadows sneak about through the long corridors as if afraid of awakening the ghosts of the place.

The Alster pavilion, the famous restaurant, however, is brilliantly lighted all night. The Hamburger can still afford to spend a mark or two on a seidel of beer, light and music.

All the theaters are open, but St. Pauli, the Montmartre of Hamburg, has been forced to close its cabarets and dance halls. It is now in the hands of the army of the city and in its direct you only see intoxicated sailors and the like, sauntering about in a greasy atmosphere of beer and doughnuts. The rifle ranges are doing a rushing business, for the targets are English and French soldiers. A shout of approval goes up when a hit is made.

At midnight military and petrels with fixed bayonets invade the districts and begin a thorough search for deserters and intoxicated soldiers, and here were, before the war, vice never absent, everything is quiet at one in the mutinies.
